

In cooperation with Shared Ambition the Dutch Association of Individual Psychology (NWIP) is proud to present the upcoming webinar on February 12 2021 presented by Jon Sperry, Ph.D. from Lynn University, USA.

TOPIC: CASE CONCEPTUALIZATION

Psychologists, counselors and other therapists are living in the “era of accountability” in which practitioners are increasingly expected to provide counseling and therapy services that are effective. Central to accountability is the capacity to develop accurate case conceptualizations which can explain the client’s basic life pattern, focus treatment interventions, and anticipate treatment challenges.

Case conceptualization is considered by many to be the most important competency expected in clinical practice today. Across all theoretical approaches, “pattern recognition” has emerged as a useful strategy for sorting through large amounts of clinical case data and finding meaning and patterns.

Fortunately, Adlerians can utilize Adler’s construct of “movement” to guide the case conceptualization process. Identifying a client’s basic movement—toward, against, away from, or ambivalent—provides a clinically useful starting point for quickly recognizing a basic life pattern and then “confirming” the pattern with life style information from family constellation and early recollections.

This webinar describes a step-by-step strategy and process for developing a concise, accurate, and compelling case conceptualization and treatment plans based on the client’s basic pattern of movement which integrates other key Adlerian constructs. Several cases will be used to illustrate the elements of case conceptualization.
